Radersburg, a boom mining town from the early 1860s, one of the first in the Territory, has a unique history of true Western charm. From a dignified county seat of Jefferson County as well as a rough mining camp in 1869 with a population of 1000, it developed and boomed by rich mines opening on all sides.

Radersburg received its name from Reuben Rader, and is located 13 miles from Toston on Crow Creek, the former hunting grounds of the Crow Indians evidenced by the tepee (tipi) rings, buffalo jumps and artifacts still being found in the area. In 1865 when Jefferson County was formed Reuben Rader was appointed one of its first county commissioners.

Radersburg is a spot for those who like a marvelous mountain view in all direction, clean air, hunting and fishing and wide open spaces.
